

Settlor Control of Trusts: Sham, Illusory Trusts, and the True Purpose of the Trust: Is There a Trust?

by

Prof. Steven Gallagher,
Professor of Practice in Law,
Associate Dean
(Academic & Student Affairs),
The Faculty of Law,
The Chinese University of Hong Kong

Steven Gallagher was awarded a first class LL.B. He was called to the Bar of England and Wales in 2006. Steven teaches equity and trusts, property law, and a course on art, antiquities, cultural heritage and the law. In September 2023, Steven began teaching a new course on digital technology and law. Steven has presented over 200 continuing professional development courses for solicitors in Hong Kong on many topics associated with property. Steven's research interests include equity and the law of trusts, cultural heritage law, Chinese custom and law, and legal history. In 2023, Steven published a textbook on Digital Technology and Law. He is not a technologist.

Reserved power trusts are increasingly popular with settlors wishing to retain control over their property while still distancing themselves for tax planning and asset protection purposes. However, there may be issues with reserving certain powers and/or reserving too much power for themselves—including whether there is actually a trust. Further issues arise when settlors adopt the role of protector for the trust, again reserving powers which may be inconsistent with a trust, and which they may exercise without a fiduciary obligation.

Trustees face consequent issues with their obligation to comply with the reserved powers and possible conflict with their fiduciary duties to the trust and the potential beneficiaries. In particular, these trusts often involve shares in an underlying company as the main subject matter of the trust. The Bartlett duty of supervision has made it common practice to include “anti-Bartlett” clauses in trusts to cancel this duty, coupled with exclusion clauses to protect the trustee from liability for not interfering in the supervision of the underlying company.

This seminar considers how a settlor may reserve control over the trust and how a trustee may mitigate their fiduciary obligations. The seminar will conclude by considering whether a settlor should retain control over a trust and whether a trustee should mitigate their fiduciary obligations.
